Police remain committed to solving Lane Bryant murders

In the sixteen years since a gunman killed five women inside the Lane Bryant store at Brookside Marketplace, the Tinley Park Police Department has received nearly 8,000 tips.

And while none of them has led to an arrest yet, Tinley Park Police Chief Tom Tilton said he's sure that it's only a matter of time before new advancements in technology and fresh leads catch up with the killer.

"This is one mystery that we are determined to solve," Tilton said. "We owe it to the victims and their families to find the person responsible for this heinous crime and finally close the book on this terrible chapter of their lives."

The police department assigned a new Lane Bryant detective to the case in 2022, and he continues to work with the crime lab and review new and old tips daily. The Village Board also continues to ensure the police department has the funding it needs for evidence testing, travel and other resources.

"Although it happened in 2008, the Lane Bryant murders are still very much at the top of everyone's mind here in the Village," Mayor Michael Glotz said. "This isn't just something we think about every February 2; it's a constant thought, and a crime that we're committed to solving."

A composite likeness of the suspect and an audio recording of his voice from the 911 call are available on the Village website at TinleyPark.org/LaneBryant.
